

The blooming of the humble daffodil heralds the arrival of spring. There are so many different varieties of daffodil to choose from that one could never get bored; the flowering season lasts many weeks.

A dramatic feature of mass-planted tulips or hyacinths is almost unrivalled for visual impact. Interplanting with annuals such as pansies or violets can soften this look, and the annuals can also disguise any aging bulb foliage. Annuals are perfect for this, as they will reappear each year with little or no assistance.
